POSTAL REGULATORY COMMISSION

Dear Members of the Commission,

I am writing to implore that Louis DeJoy be removed as the head of the Postal Service. His appointment by Donald J. Trump was an effort to meddle with the election and to help him win. Mr. DeJoy also has a conflict of interest with his own company benefiting from his role with the postal service. He is damaging the USPS greatly and has plans to inflict more regulations that will disrupt effective service to the people of this country.

Myself and many people I know rely on the USPS for the prompt delivery of medical supplies and medication. Delay in the delivery of medication may cause serious health issues and, in some cases, death. Seniors also rely on the postal service for receiving and paying bills. Delaying such delivery can cause late fees and damage to credit scores.

Seniors and physically challenged people also use USPS to vote in elections. The disruption of this voting mechanism is likely the biggest danger to keeping DeJoy at the helm. In order for the US to maintain a democracy, it is imperative that we have someone at the head of the USPS who is unbiased and has no stake in the outcome of elections.

I am the one who has opted to write for a large group of people who share and helped me include all their concerns. Please take this to heart and do the right thing.

Sincerely,

Suzan Livengood
